Further, the tightly controlled atmosphere of the packaging makes people think that they are buying items that are harmless. But even this packaging is not foolproof, as it can be tampered with. Share: Total shares: FULL STORY In this July 26, 2012 photo, fruits and vegetables labeled as genetically engineered (right) are displayed at the Green Store, a community garden in San Francisco. According to a study published in the journal Nature this week, the amount of genes included in modern food crops has been rising dramatically, but scientists have little idea of the health effects.
